

Walk a corridor or enter a treatment area and you will see that we celebrate generosity. We do not create excellence alone, but through the partnership of thousands of people who give in different ways. Some of these people work here. Others live in the community.

A few even reside in different states or countries. But all share our purpose of creating an extraordinary patient experience for you.

Our organization began with an act of generosity. (sample story) When John and Florence Campbell lost their first-born child to typhoid fever in 1921, they resolved to turn their loss into abundance for others. Although nothing could bring back their son, something might prevent other parents from losing someone they love. So they decided to donate their 18-room home to create a hospital. Since that time many others built upon this gift to make possible the technologies, life-saving and life-enhancing services that exist today.

Generosity sustains us at (organization name). We are not for profit both in our organizational form and in spirit as we dedicate ourselves to the great purpose of healing and enriching life in our community.
